He married Lucy Dalton November 09, 1778 in Albemarle County, Virginia. She was born September 15, 1764 in Albemarle County, Virginia, and died September 16, 1844 in Randolph County, Missouri.

Notes for John Watts: 24 Jan 1756 - Birth in Orange Co. VA 1776 - John enlisted and served as a private in Captain Joseph Spencer's company. Colonel Potswood's 7th Virginia regiment, was in the battle of Brandywine in which he was wounded in the ankle. He was also in the battle of Germantown and served about two years. "In 1846, Richard White, a brother of Lieutenant William White of OrangeCo. VA, with whom the soldier, John Watts served, stated that said brother, William, presented John Watts with a sword because of his excellent training of soldiers in Orange Co. during the war; he referred to John Watts as a relative of the family." (Veterans Administration letter to Larence N. Watts dated May 16, 1934). Lewis Fife, a great-grandson, wrote the following in a history of his mother, Elizabeth Watts Fife: A coincident that I would like to relate happened while John Watts was serving his country in George Washington's army. The American pickets were being killed frequently, which caused General Washington to investigate the cause himself. The British officers had some of the Indians fall upon the pickets in the dead hours of night and kill them without giving them any warning. The Indians dressed themselves in hog skins and would come grunting like pigs through the timber and underbrush until they came in close distance to the American sentry. The American pickets believing they were only pigs paid very little attention until it was too late. General Washington called for someone who would volunteer to go out and bring in the invader, so John Watts offered his services saying, "I will bring in the pig in the morning." The hour of midnight was slowly approaching. The tired soldiers were all sleep. Everything was still and serene. Soon the grunting of a pig was heard coming toward the picket. He watched it and listened until the pig came in close range. He did not say "Halt" as was the rules of the army but raised and shot and got his bacon. The next morning John Watts was toting on his back a pig Indian, who had disguised himself as a pig." "After the war was over and Washington's Army was mustered out, John Watts returned to his home at Monte County in Albemarle County, Virginia. John Watts was a close neighbor to Peter Jefferson, the father of Thomas Jefferson, the author of our Independence. General Washington promoted John Watts with a great honor for his achievement and soon were no more pickets lost, but all reported back to camp in safety."

Page 773, WILLIAM D. and GARRETT WATTS, farmers and stock-raisers, P. O. Chilesburg. Among the pioneer families who came to Fayette County a hundred years ago, when it was an unbroken wilderness, and Central Kentucky was the haunt of wild beasts, and the hunting ground of prowling savages, was the Watts family, who settled in what is now Athens Precinct, and where descendants still live. David Watts, the patriarch of the family, was of Virginia stock, and was among the first of those hardy pioneers to cross the Alleghenies, and in the beautiful land lying beyond their lofty peaks, hew out a home for themselves and families. He was born in the State of Virginia, in 1761, where he grew to manhood, and married Ruth Twyman, and emigrated to Kentucky about the year 1780. Upon his arrival, he settled in the present County of Fayette, upon land that has ever since remained in possession of his descendants, and upon which he died in 1835. His son, Garrett Watts, continued upon the farm his father settled, and, under his management, it was much improved and increased in acreage. He was born in 1796, and when grown was married to Martha Twyman; he died in 1873, at the age of seventy-seven years. A son, David T. Watts, who had charge of the farm during his life, was born April 11, 1831, and married to Tilitha Quisenberry, November 15, 1849. She was the daughter of Joel and Elizabeth (Haggard) Quisenberry, who were natives of Virginia, and settled in Clark County, where they died. David D. Watts died in 1854, leaving two sons, who, with their mother, still occupy the homestead, settled by the original David Watts a century ago.

"Redlands" is situated about one and a half miles from the town and about three hundred yards east of the road to the Peaks of Otter. It is brick colonial building, but Mr. Saunders has made some additions to the house which have somewhat changed its original appearance. The view from the front, looking south, commands a magnificent stretch of open country, the beautiful, rolling fields in the immediate foreground being a part of the estate. James Watts married Elizabeth Durrett of Albemarle County, and they had a number of children, among whom were James, Jr., who inherited that part of the land on which the manor house stood, and Richard D., who built "Montpelier", later the home of John H. Watts, and now owned by Harry H. White. After the death of James Watts, Jr., "Redlands" became the property of his nephew, Col. James Watts, an officer in the Confederate Army and a wealthy and influential citizen of Lynchburg, Virginia. Col. Watts sold the place to Mr. Saunders, who is one of the most progressive farmers of the county. The early members of the Watts family are buried in the family graveyard near the house.

Notes for Lt. Col. James Winston Watts:

...Of Lynchburg, Va., who rendered distinguished service as Lt. Col. of the 2nd Va. Cav., C.S.A. Colonial Families of the Southern States of America, by Stella Pickett Hardy, Published by Genealogical Publishing Co., Baltimore, MD. 1965., pa. 531.

He entered the Confederate army in April, 1861, s first lieutenant of Company A. Second Regiment Virginia Cavalry, and at once went to the front. Upon the reorganization of the Army of Northern Virginia he was commissioned Lieutenant-Colonel, on May 1862, and attached to General Turner Ashby's brigade, "Stonewall" Jackson's division. He was slightly wounded in an affair at Little Washington, in the Valley campaign; and at both Occoquan and Aldie he was severely wounded. During the second battle of Manassas, Colonel Watts led the advance of his regiment in the charge at the Lewis House. In this fight Colonel Watts received eight saber wounds.

Disabled by wounds in the action at Aldie in July 1863, he was forced to retire for a season, one month later he returned to duty being assigned to the command of the military post at Bedford City (then known as Liberty), where he continued in command until the surrender of the Army of Northern Virginia at Appomattox Court House.

The war over, his spirit nothing daunted, he at once set about repairing his financial losses. His lands devastated, his labor freed, he decided to enter commercial life, and in 1865 made his home in Lynchburg, uniting with his brother Richard T. Watts , and his brother-in-law, George M. Jones, and former business manager B. R. Markham, in forming the co-partnership, Jones, Watts & Company, with three stores in Lynchburg and branches in Danville, Bedford City, Salem and Roanoke, and for nearly a quarter of a century theirs was the leading hardware house in the western half of the state. In 1887 they sold to Bell, Barker & Jennings and retired from the hardware business. They became interested in several coal mining operations, and at the time of his death Colonel Watts was director in the Gilliam, the Louisville, and the Greenbrier Coal and Coke companies. He was at one time president of the National Exchange Bank, and was at different times a director in this and other banks of Lynchburg.
